This excellent book about the history of Kershaw's South Carolina Brigade was written by one of it's soldiers D. Augustus Dickert. Originally published in 1899, the author tells the history of not only the history of the brigade but his own views on why South Carolina seceded from the Union in 1860. The author tells the fascinating history of the officers of the brigade beginning with it's commanding General Joseph Kershaw and then tells a brief biography of the higher ranked officers of the brigade. The author was a member of the 3rd South Carolina Infantry Regiment and he tells about the beginning battles of the Civil War up to 1863 in this first of two volumes he wrote about the brigade. His recollections of the battles he was in is highlighted with great prose and descriptions. Mr. Dickert who ran away at 15 years of age to join the regiment was a Captain in his regiment when it surrendered four years later in 1865. The author describes the regiment in the battles of 1st

Manassas (Bull Run), Seven Pines, Sharpsburg (Antietam), Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, Chickamauga and Chattanooga, Fort Sanders and Bean Station. This first volume ends in year 1863 and the second volume is about the battles from 1864 to the brigades surrender at Appomattox Court House in 1865. This first volume is a great read and the author describes the experiences of the regiment in a fascinating prose. This is a hard fighting brigade and was able to inflict serious damage to the Army of the Potomac in every battle on the eastern theatre of the Civil War. During the battle of Gettysburg on July 2, 1863 during the afternoon the soldiers of Kershaw's Brigade made an unsuccessful attempt to silence the cannon along the Wheatfield Road.
